

60 Christmas "Who's Most Likely To" Questions for Family & Friends

"Who's most likely to fall asleep before the presents are opened?" Everybody already knows the answer — that's what makes this game work. It needs no props, no teams and no rules to explain, so it fits a living room full of cousins just as well as a dinner table of old friends.

Below are 60 original Christmas questions that are safe for all ages. Read them out loud and point, or let everyone vote secretly on their phones and watch the results pop up on the TV.

How to play

1. Paper version: one person reads a question out loud. On the count of three, everyone points at the person they think fits best. Whoever gets the most fingers pointed at them "wins" that round (and has to explain themselves).
2. Phone version: open Sleigh Night on a TV or laptop. Guests scan the QR code and vote secretly on their phones. The TV reveals the results with a drumroll, and anyone who voted with the majority scores points.
3. At the end everyone gets a funny award based on how the room voted — "Most likely to burn the cookies" makes a great screenshot.

Tips for a great round

- Go first with a question about yourself to show it's all in good fun.
- Ask the "winner" of each round to tell the story behind it — that's where the best laughs come from.
- Mix in a few sweet ones ("give the best hugs") so nobody only gets roasted.
- Playing with little kids? Use the kids list so they understand every question.
